HOW TO DEFEND A CREDIT CARD CASE

Written by:
CRAIG JORDAN, Richardson
Lesser & Jordan

Article originally presented at the State Bar of Texas Advanced Consumer and Commercial Law Course 2009.

State Bar of Texas
STATE BAR COLLEGE SUMMER SCHOOL
July 22-24, 2010
Galveston Island

CHAPTER 17
TABLE OF CONTENTS

CREDIT CARD PLAINTIFFS HAVE PROBLEMS PROVING BREACH OF CONTRACT CLAIMS ..................... 1
A credit card agreement cannot be enforced without evidence that it was actually offered ................ 2
A credit card plaintiff cannot recover interest or fees absent proof an agreement to pay interest or fees. 4

A CREDIT CARD CASE SHOULD NOT BE BROUGHT BASED UPON AN ACCOUNT STATED THEORY .... 4
Suits on an account, including account stated, are implied claims that arise out of a series of transactions, not out of an express agreement. ........................................................................................................................................ 5
Credit card claims do not fall within the scope of the sworn account rule, TRCP 185 .......................................... 5
To the extent the common law account theories extend beyond the scope of Rule 185, they do not extend to credit card cases. .................................................................................................................................................................. 5 Suits on account are limited to claims arising out of relationships involving the sale of goods without an express contract .................................................................................................................................................................. 5
Texas law does not allow a plaintiff to recover on an implied contractual theory for transactions governed by an express contract. ....................................................................................................................................................... 6
The federal Truth-in-Lending Act requires the material terms of a credit card relationship to set forth in a written agreement. .............................................................................................................................................................. 6
A Plaintiff may not abandon a breach of contract claim in order to seek a recovery on an implied contractual theory ................................................................................................................................................................. 7

CREDIT CARD PLAINTIFFS CANNOT RECOVER IN QUANTUM MERUIT .................................................. 7

A CREDIT CARD PLAINTIFF MUST OWN A CREDIT CARD ACCOUNT TO HAVE STANDING TO SUE ON IT ......................................................... 7

A CREDIT CARD PLAINTIFF COLLECTING UNDER AN ASSIGNMENT MAY NOT HAVE THE SAME RIGHTS AS THE ORIGINATOR OF THE ACCOUNT 8

LIMITATIONS ISSUES .......................................................................................................................................... 8

SUMMARY JUDGMENT PROOF ISSUES ............................................................................................................. 9

ARBITRATION CONFIRMATION ISSUES ........................................................................................................... 9 Credit card plaintiffs must prove the existence of an agreement to arbitrate in order to obtain confirmation of an award under Federal Arbitration Act. .................................................................................................................... 9
The Court, not the arbitrator, must decide whether the parties entered into an arbitration agreement ............. 9
A credit card defendant is not barred by the 90 day time limit in section 12 of the Federal Arbitration Act from denying the existence of an agreement to arbitrate. ............................................................................................... 10
Debt buyers ordinarily must prove that they are assignees of the original creditor’s arbitration agreement ...... 10
The Federal Arbitration Act contains certain procedural requirements for confirmation of an award that credit card plaintiffs frequently ignore. .......................................................................................................................... 10 Credit card plaintiffs must prove that the parties agreed that the award could be confirmed in order to obtain confirmation of an award under the Federal Arbitration Act. ............................................................................. 10 Credit card plaintiffs must typically prove that the defendant and the defendant’s attorney signed the arbitration agreement in order to obtain confirmation of an award under the Texas General Arbitration Act ................. 10 Arbitration confirmation is no mere registration process. A plaintiff must establish the elements of confirmation by evidentiary proof. ............................................................................................................................................. 11
The statements in NAF awards relating to the existence of an arbitration agreement and the amount of an award are inadmissible hearsay. ....................................................................................................................................... 11
NAF arbitration awards are not self-authenticating. ............................................................................................ 11

DEFENSE STRATEGIES ....................................................................................................................................... 12